Oral isotretinoin in combination with topical clobetasol for chronic actinic dermatitis. Patients with moderate to severe chronic actinic dermatitis (CAD) may not respond to conventional treatment. The combination of topical steroids and oral isotretinoin has been reported to be effective, but this treatment may be expensive and inconvenient for patients and doctors. We assessed the effect of a combination of clobetasol propionate 0.05% ointment and oral isotretinoin for the treatment of CAD. Twenty-two patients with CAD were randomly assigned to one of two groups (a combination of clobetasol 0.05% ointment plus isotretinoin, n = 12, and isotretinoin alone, n = 10). The isotretinoin dosage was 0.5 mg/kg/day in combination with topical clobetasol propionate 0.05% ointment twice daily. The treatment period was 4 weeks. The clinical response to treatment was assessed using a scoring system. Seven of 12 patients (58%) in the combination group showed a good response to treatment, whereas none of the 10 patients who received isotretinoin alone responded well (P = .0037). The mean (SD) scores of the combination group were 1.2 (0.9) at baseline and 0.6 (0.9) at the end of the treatment period (P = .016). The mean (SD) score of the isotretinoin-only group was 1.5 (0.7) at baseline and 2.0 (0.7) at the end of the treatment period (P = .119). The combination of clobetasol 0.05% ointment plus isotretinoin may be an alternative to long-term oral or topical steroids in patients with moderate to severe CAD. The Rangers, however, are hoping to be a big part of
