Long-term, growth-focusing, spectral response characteristics of the JENAM+1.5-e for shortwave and longwave applications. This paper presents a spectral calibration study performed on the JENAM+1.5-e, an optimized longwave absorption cell for the EU CLWB project. JENAM+1.5-e is a closed-cell, multiple-zone, multi-layer absorption cell with an effective design temperature of T_{eff} approximately 500°K and a predicted volume of approximately 1,630 liters. Its design wavelength is at 856 nm, which is close to the 856 nm reference window of the EU CLWB-1A and EU CLWB-1B. The JENAM+1.5-e has a substantial absorption at 860 nm, which corresponds to the 860 nm target for both the EU CLWB-1A and EU CLWB-1B. The specific spectral absorption of the JENAM+1.5-e measured over a wide range of wavelengths (365-2,400 nm) was compared with the theoretical absorption spectra of a number of gaseous species in air. The results demonstrate that the JENAM+1.5-e is appropriate for the near-infrared region of the spectrum, with very high performance absorption at the 1,560-2,400 nm range, for wavelengths of 856 nm and longer, where an absorption for the large number of species is typically found in the JENAM+1.5-e design wavelength range. Acquired Lymphedema and the Use of Manual Lymph Drainage. To assess the evidence for the use of Manual Lymph Drainage (MLD) for the treatment of Acquired Lymphedema in adults. A systematic review and meta-analysis was performed of the literature in the form of clinical studies published in English up to April 2014. The primary outcome measures were: volume, trophic status, lymphatic function and the impact on quality of life. Secondary outcomes included: pain, range of motion (ROM), and skin and soft tissue involvement. The selected studies were assessed for quality of evidence using the Scottish Intercollegiate Guidelines Network (
