Lymphatic vessels are equipped with surface-located adhesion molecules, and their immune system-type architecture is very unique. As a consequence, lymphangiogenesis is strictly dependent on immune cells. In addition to hematopoietic cells, lymphangiogenesis is promoted by the production of various lymphangiogenic growth factors, such as vascular endothelial growth factor-C, hepatocyte growth factor, and macrophage-derived chemoattractant protein-1. The regulation of lymphangiogenesis by these growth factors is carried out by the activation of the corresponding receptors expressed on cells involved in lymphangiogenesis. A number of hormones and cytokines are also involved in lymphangiogenesis, including thyroxine, tumor necrosis factor-alpha, epidermal growth factor, cholera toxin, and transforming growth factor-beta.[Tests] [./check_full] type = 'RunApp' input = 'check_full.i' issues = '#125' [./test] type = 'Exodiff' input = 'check_full.i' exodiff = 'check_full_out.e' callback = deallog prereq = check_full requirement = 'The system shall check the full system of equations.'
