The present invention relates to a data processing system and a method for managing the storage capacity of backup data stored in a device storing data, such as a semiconductor memory, which is used for storing data. In recent years, in the field of information processing, a data processing system including a plurality of such devices used for storing data (hereinafter called "storage devices") is often configured so that data (hereinafter called "primary data") generated in an information processing unit, such as a computer, is stored in a storage device in the data processing system. The storage device is used for storing not only the primary data generated in the information processing unit, but also secondary data created by editing the primary data. By using such a storage device, it becomes possible to store data in the information processing unit in a safe and reliable manner. In the event of a disaster or the like, it is possible to continue the processing of data by using an appropriate storage device having the above-mentioned primary data stored therein. However, even when the number of storage devices is increased, a storage device with a greater storage capacity is required for a system for storing a large amount of data. As a solution for this problem, when the primary data to be stored is generated in a storage device storing a relatively large amount of data, the storage device can be replaced with another storage device (i.e., a backup device). In the case where the storage capacity of a storage device storing data is insufficient, the storage capacity of the storage device can be expanded by adding a second storage device. FIG. 18 shows an exemplary storage device. In FIG. 18, a first storage device 1 is a storage device storing data in a main storage. A second storage device 2 is a storage device for storing data in a backup storage. A first control section 9 controls the first storage device 1. A

Coronavirus According to NHL insider, Matt Hamill, NHL playoffs will end early because of coronavirus. Hockey is back in an emergency way. Starting in March because of the coronavirus situation, NHL season has been postponed until mid-October.
Matt Hamill, an expert on the sport, shared his view on the current situation of the NHL. It's quite surprising to see him say that playoffs will end early because of the virus. Hamill doesn't seem worried about the new situation, but he doesn't deny that there could be a threat. Despite the fact that the NHL season is being extended, Hamill says that if they don't start a later date, early March would be the best time for them to get the games started. He also claims that people have to be careful while signing the contracts, and the owners are not happy about it. He expects the season to start on the 5th of October and that the first three-and-a-half weeks would be playoffs. According to him, playoffs can't be back to normal in a short time, and it would be a good idea for the NHL to offer a format that's a little similar to the European leagues. And the most important thing for NHL fans is having a format where the best players from North America participate. Because of a shortened season, several players of the best leagues in Europe are being played right now. And these players are not so eager to be used in the games, although they are doing their best. Hamill has also been quoted saying that a longer season of 90 games would be better for the players, but that would also change the schedule and the schedule is the most important factor. Another thing that Hamill said is that the Canadian fans are really pissed off that NHL is not giving money to the players, because this is when they need it the most.
