The integrated circuit (IC) industry is continually reducing the size of transistors in order to increase the speed and reduce the power consumption of transistors. However, as the size of the transistors decreases, the capacitance of the gate dielectric layer (e.g., silicon dioxide (SiO_2)) also decreases. When the capacitance of the gate dielectric layer is decreased below a critical value, a phenomenon known as direct tunneling (DT) occurs. The leakage current due to DT is a serious problem for transistor-based ICs.Zebra Imaging Zebra Imaging is an American film production and post-production company based in Beverly Hills, California, United States. In a current project I have created a separate instance of the web application (call it "Web Application 2") which is in charge of managing users and managing user sessions. The web application is being completely rewritten from scratch so that's why it is being separated from the main application. I would like to use Google Analytics within Web Application 2 and want to make sure I am in compliance with the terms of service. Is there a way to use Google Analytics in Web Application 2? Thanks! A: If you use a tracking code in your application you're fine. The only catch is that if the user uses a different web browser you'll need to create a custom report using custom dimensions.
