These circuits usually have a circuit breaker that opens an open circuit when some predetermined condition occurs such as a rapid brake pedal application. A circuit breaker is normally located adjacent the circuit breakers of other circuits in the vehicle to ensure that a predetermined amount of power is not released from the circuit when the circuit is opened. This amount of power is normally referred to as the "sinkage current" or "pre-load current". In a circuit breaker of this type, once the circuit is closed, the circuit must be periodically tested to make sure that the circuit still remains closed in the event that one of the safety devices is defective. A door switch is normally used to check the integrity of the circuit breaker. However, some vehicles include circuit breakers that are located a considerable distance 3da54e8ca3
